

Tell me, how will a decision against the current net neutrality protocols impact the residents of Texas and Louisiana? Don't you think it is imperative to be a guardian for the public from the threat of financial exploitation of goods and services on the internet? If the FCC formally doubts the net doesn't even need rules blocking and slowing traffic impacting pay parity by repealing its regulatory authority; then who will stand ready and able in the best interest of the public? Will it be left to a parent or grandparent? Should the citizenry figure this out and take this on too? If you vote against the current net neutrality protocols who will advocate in behalf of teens and senior citizens, a weak and toothless FCC Board in these powerful days? While I may not agree with every decision authored by the FCC, it is questionable as to why are you seeking to strip your own authority in this area. As a former service member, I expect the FCC to be a decision making body that can counterbalance powerful business interests. You should maximize the existing authority to express intellectual firepower to hard decisions. You are to preserve the hard fought gains we have earned as a country consistently and rightfully down through the years to a competent approach towards public education. If you vote otherwise you vote for a mediocre approach to checks and balances. Isn't the FCC intended to appeal to the best and highest traditions of governance? What would be the use of a competent FCC Board that cannot legally investigate broad band provider practices to intentionally create a non-competitive environment? What problem are you trying to correct? As a parent, in my opinion there is none, leave it alone.
